Employing people with a neurological condition or brain injury?

The Working Life Service can help

What is the Working Life Service?

Neurological conditions affect the brain, nervous system or spinal column and can include:

- Multiple Sclerosis
- Epilepsy
- Parkinson's Disease
- Cerebral Palsy
- Dementia
- Paraplegia

Brain injuries include:

- Stroke
- Head injury
- Brain haemorrhage
- Brain tumour

The Working Life Service is a service run by Neurosupport to help people affected by a neurological condition or a brain injury to assist in retaining a job, returning to work or finding a meaningful alternative to work.

The Working Life Service will work with you, as an employer, to help you retain one of your most valuable assets - your employee - or assist you in helping new employees to reach their potential.

We have over 12 years experience supporting employers and employees to successfully manage the working environment.

What can the Working Life Service offer?

The Working Life Service can offer:

- Information on specific conditions
- Advice on adaptations to the workplace or job
- Provide awareness training to management and colleagues
- Job coach support
- Information on available grants
- Advice on your legal responsibilities under the Disability Discrimination Act

We can offer assistance regardless of whether:

- A current employee develops a neurological condition or brain injury
- A current employee's condition deteriorates
- A person with a neurological condition or brain injury has applied for a job
- You just want to know more or raise your company's awareness
- In most cases this help is free

An employee is your most valuable asset. You have paid to recruit, train and support this person.

Let us help you retain this considerable investment.

Can you help us?

Could you offer a work placement or work experience to someone who is trying to re-enter the job market?

If the answer is YES, then please contact us.
